

Instead of mourning a genocide, what if we could STOP one?

And what will history say about us if we don't?

The 20th Century is haunted by the ghosts of the millions of innocent victims of genocide the world failed to protect. From the Holocaust to Rwanda, the question of "How could this be allowed to happen?" will hang in the air forever.

And those who stood by will be forever defined by what they failed to do.

Here at the dawn of the 21st Century, a new genocide is unfolding in the Darfur region of western Sudan. In a time of tsunamis and devastating earthquakes, the UN has called Darfur "the world's greatest humanitarian crisis." Nearly 3 years since the violence began, the massacres continue, women are still routinely raped as a means of ethnic cleansing, and children still go hungry.

We have the power to stop it. But we must act today, before it is too late.

Following the genocide in Rwanda, Senator Paul Simon said, "If every member of the House and Senate had received 100 letters from people back home saying we have to do something about Rwanda, then I think the response would have been different."

Please fill out and sign the attached post card to President Bush, and ask for a response. A few moments of effort, repeated a million times over and focused behind a single message, can have an impact on millions of lives.

Do it today, so we can look ourselves in the mirror tomorrow.

Dear President Bush:

During your first year in the White House, you wrote in the margins of a report on the Rwandan genocide, "Not on my watch." I urge you to live up to those words by using the power of your office to support a stronger multinational force to protect the people of Darfur.
